Excerpt: . . . that as a mirror they will reflect the peculiarities, both good and bad, of those with whom they associate. A Few Proverbs. That these statements are in accordance with the general belief is shown by many proverbs of the present and the past: Tell me your company and Ill tell you what you are. Keep company with the good and youll be one of them. Kingsley says, Men become false if they associate with liars; cynics if they live with scorners; mean, if they live much with the covetous. Tennyson says, I am part of all that I have met. How many, like Charles Lamb, have selected the wrong kind of companions! Like him they also could say, after ten years of such company, Behold me now, at the robust period of life reduced to imbecility and decay. Life itself has much of the confusion, the trouble, the obscure perplexity of a troubled dream. Parents, would you save your children from such certain, fearful retribution See that you know who their companions are. See that they are not in company with those who, by vaunting the pleasures of shame and dishonor, may beckon them on toward wasted lives. XXIII. THE CHILD AND THE SCHOOL. Hard Questions. Many anxious parents ask themselves such questions as, At what age should a child start to school What about the kindergarten Shall I send to public school or private Since the future welfare of a child may largely depend...
