Excerpt: .service value remains, whether it is still an efficient type or so obsolete as to justify early replacement. The work is facilitated greatly if a regular form is provided, with proper columns for the various items mentioned and, in addition, columns for unit prices and totals. Such a sheet is shown in Form XL. It is eight and a half by eleven in size and should have a sufficient margin at the left to allow fitting into a standard binder. When the inventorying is completed and verified, the next step is to price the various articles. This is a task that requires the close attention of an expert. Before finally fixing prices, however, it is customary for the appraisers to consult with the factory manager or his engineer, as doubt often exists about the accuracy of figures, which only one intimately acquainted with the...
